

AMOS LUTHER⁸, HOMER EUGENE, LILLIE DORA AND WALTER WINCHESTER PEGRAM

Issue of Samuel William Pegram and Martha Jane Taylor

AMOS LUTHER PEGRAM⁸ (Samuel William⁷, Samuel Gilliam⁶, Edward⁵, Daniel⁴, Edward³, Daniel², George¹) was the first child of Samuel William Pegram and Martha Jane Taylor, Figure 19. He was born 14 January 1874 at Falkner, Mississippi. He studied dentistry in Louisville, Kentucky, and returned to Ripley and practiced there and at Pontotoc and Aberdeen, Mississippi. Apparently he had certain days, or weeks, that he would be in the different places. He married Susan Woods of Brookhaven, Mississippi.

He was on a dirt road riding a bicycle when he had a pulmonary hemorrhage, and fell to the ground. He was found in the road by a negro man with a load of lumber. He placed Luther on the lumber and carried him into town. He was never well after that time, although he did become temporarily active again. It was said that he had tuberculosis, called consumption at the time, and a dreaded disease it was. The treatment was plenty of fresh air and rest. A popular concept was to go to a dry climate and live out of doors. Another young man of Ripley also had tuberculosis, and he and Luther went to west Texas and lived in the open. They carried a negro boy with them to help with the chores. They went to the vicinity of Menard, and lived in the open until Luther became too ill to do so. He went into Menard, called Menardville at the time, and obtained a room and board with a family by the name of Lewis. He died there on 2 December 1902. His mother, after a long and arduous trip by train and stage, arrived the day following his death. Luther was buried in a cemetery, on a hill, in Menard.

The photograph of Luther was before his illness, and shows him to be a handsome man. It was said by members of the family that he was an immaculate dresser and popular socially.

HOMER EUGENE PEGRAM⁸, Figure 20, the second child of Samuel W. Pegram and Martha Jane Taylor, was born 16 March 1876 at Falkner, Mississippi. She was the daughter of W.E. Yancey and Emma Johnson of Jackson, Mississippi. Homer was in the grocery business at Pontotoc, Mississippi, for a number of years, and after that he was a salesman. He died in Memphis on 22 July 1957. He is buried at Wier's Chapel, near Ripley, Mississippi, where his parents and other

WALTER WINCHESTER PEGRAM⁸ (Samuel William⁷, Samuel Gilliam⁶, Edward⁵, Daniel⁴, Edward³, Daniel², George¹) was born 20 April 1883 at Falkner, Mississippi. Figure 22 is a poor likeness, but the only available one. The name Winchester is a family name. Walter's great grandfather had a brother named Winchester, who has many descendants in the Charlotte, North Carolina area, a number of whom have borne the name Winchester.

Walter moved to Ripley with his parents about 1888, and to the farm, one mile east of Ripley, when his father purchased the Hindman place. He was educated in the local schools. He married Viola Childers, 11 February 1906. She was the daughter of Alfred Childers and Martha Dunnam.

Walter's father was instrumental in getting one of the early rural mail routes established in Tippah County, and Walter served as a mail carrier from the time that he was a young man until his death. His route was for the most part from Ripley east.

Walter was a great fox hunter and was known over several states for the fine Walker fox hounds that he had. They were very much sought after following his death. Walter and other fox hunting enthusiasts would mount horses, usually on a weekend, and take to the country for a chase. They often spent the night listening to the hounds. The large number of fine dogs with their variation in voices, made music to their ears. One has to be a dedicated fox hunter to appreciate the relaxation, joy and contentment connected with the chase. There were two varieties of foxes in the area, the red fox and the grey fox. The red foxes were the choice of the hunters. They would run far and long, unlike the grey fox which would hole up sooner, and thus end the chase. The hunters never liked for the dogs to catch the foxes. They wanted to protect them, especially the red foxes, for future chases.

Walter died 17 May 1928, and Viola died 23 March 1971. Both are buried at Wier's Chapel, a few miles southwest of Ripley, where Walter's parents and other family members are interred. Walter and Viola had four children: CARL GASTON⁹, WALTER RAY, JAMES and RUTH.
